

“New storm chasing series takes the internet by storm”

Chicago, IL - February 5, 2019 - This past weekend Limitless Light Productions premiered their new web-series “Season of the Storm”.

The series follows professional and longtime storm chaser Adam Lucio, as he embarks to find America’s most captivating and extreme storms. “We started the process in 2011 where I found the utmost interest in Joplin, Missouri where the most deadly, single tornado in modern history took place,” Mike Mullenhoff, Co-Producer, and Director of Photography of Season of the Storm, “It was eye-opening to see what mother nature is capable of.” The series star, Lucio who has been storm chasing for fifteen years, was delighted when Mullenhoff came to him to shoot the series, “It sounded exciting, I was definitely intrigued” Adam Lucio, the star on Season of the Storm. According to the producers, it was originally shot as a documentary feature film, however, “after a few chases, we decided to change it to a series and I couldn’t be more satisfied with how it turned out” says Mullenhoff. The series showcases six in-depth episodes that allow you to witness the real, raw, and beautiful side of storm chasing. “We really did not want to capture any of that fake reality type drama, it kind of takes away from the series.” Bailey Durham, Co-Producer of Season of the Storm. Although the series is a reality-based documentary, the producers have taken a whole new approach without any of the reality bull-s***! The series has been received better than what the producers had initially anticipated. “We are super thrilled with the way the public reacted and the positive feedback we have acquired just from the opening weekend; we are looking forward to a potential season two!” Durham adds.

Season of the Storm Official Poster

Season of the Storm is now available for on-demand streaming on any electronic device. You can find the series on seasonofthestorm.com.